Security You Can Live With

Home Security Systems Can Be Tailored To The Needs Of Your Family And Budget

In the development of any security system, you should start with a basic design. For example, if a burglar should try to enter your home, he will invariably try to enter first through a window or door. Your protection therefore, should start with the fundamentals. . .

. . . your front door, back door and windows. You should have at least one remote control station installed at your most frequently used door.

Electronic Features For Maximum Security

In the design of your security system, your security consultant has a variety of components and features to meet your specific needs, including:

Siren, Speakers and Silent Alarms. Intruders know by the siren noise that you have been alerted. . . unless you want only the police to be alerted through a silent signal.

Motion Detectors. Strategically placed sensors throughout your home to monitor internal movement.

Emergency Panic Circuits. At the push of a button, you can activate the system that automatically summons medical, fire or police assistance.

Additional Remote Stations. Up to 10 control stations can be positioned at various locations throughout your home.

Outside Lighting. Light acts as a deterrent to intruders and a welcome to your guests.

Interior And Exterior Modes Of Operation. While you are in the house, you can have the system guarding only the perimeter. While you are away, the entire system can be activated protecting both the inside and outside of your home.

Rechargeable Battery Backup. Your system remains operational during power failures through the use of heavy duty, rechargeable, standby batteries.

Manual/ Automatic Testing. To add to your peace of mind, there is a special command that permits you to periodically test the many features of your system.

Fire... The In-House Intruder

Fire protection should be an important consideration in the development of your security system. Fire causes devastating property losses of over $6.5 billion dollars per year.

The majority of home fire deaths are caused by super heated poisoned air. You can neither hear it, taste it or smell it, but it contains many toxic gases including carbon monoxide. . .the same deadly gas found in the exhaust of your car.

Statistics show that the most destructive fires occur at night or in the early morning hours when people sleep.

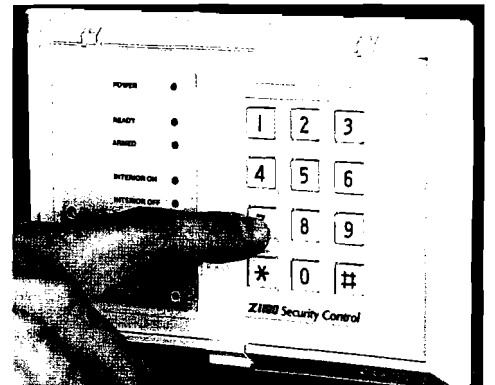

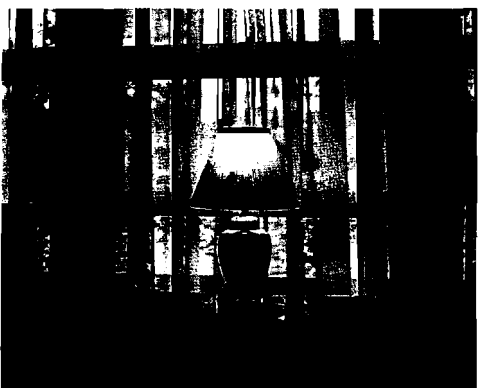

Smoke and heat detection sensors should be an important consideration or addition to your security system.

The Z1100 System Eliminates The Problems Of The Traditional Security Systems.

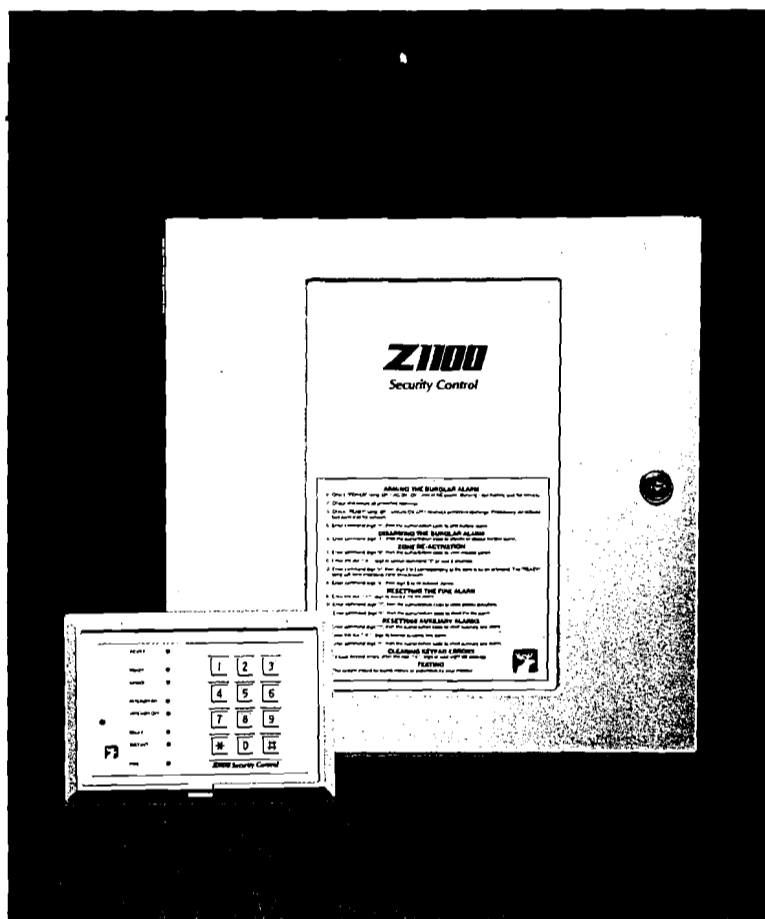

The Z1100 permits you to leave a door or window unarmed while the rest of the house is protected. You can enjoy your backyard or patio. . .or open selected windows for fresh air. . .while the remainder of your system remains on the alert.

The Z1100 monitors the status of your security system and the activity of your home. If the battery is weak or a service problem develops, the control station identifies the part of the system in trouble. . . and the nature of the problem.

You owe your family the peace of mind, and the around-the-clock safety, of a home security system. Our system offers you such pace-setting features as the:

- Most advanced components in the electronics industry;
- Tailored to the specific requirements of your home;
- Reliable, sophisticated security at an affordable price;
- Ease of operation and maintenance.
